Ironically the North Pole is located in constantly shifting sea ice, in the central part of the Arctic Ocean, where the sea depth is around 4,000 metres. This large ice, is synonymous of the transient fragility of the Earth and its eco-system. Due to Global warming the Arctic has been losing 1,000 kilometers in ice volume each year since 1995. As the ice melts in the next decade, the valuable Northwest Passage is predicted to be opened as a major shipping route. The 1200 - 3000 km Northwest Passage has long been secretly used by US, French, British and Russian Nuclear submarines. The Arctic powerplay over resources also affects the native Inuit and their traditional hunting ground.
